

Digital Images from the Medical Center Archives

The Medical Center Archives at New York-Presbyterian/Weill Cornell Medicine contains more than 14,000 digitized or born-digital images of people, buildings, events, and activities associated with the medical center and the institutions that preceded it. The images are available online in two databases: internal and external. The internal users database is available to employees of the medical center, and includes images dating from the early nineteenth century to the present. The external users database is available to the general public and contains images up to 1976.

How to Search the Database

Visit <http://library.weill.cornell.edu/archives/image-collections> and click on the desired database (either internal users or external users.) When the site opens, check the box next to the search box that says “Search within results,” and type your search term in the box.

Advanced Search

For more options click on the Advanced Search box, where you can search multiple terms and dates. Type your search terms in the query boxes and select the field from the drop down menu. Type your date range below. Select Cornell Collections in the Collection Type box, which will narrow the search to both the Medical Center Archives and Cornell University photographic collections.

Item Details

After the search results come up, click on the image to bring up details about the item and to view it in a larger size. Please note the accession number, which is needed for ordering the image from the Medical Center Archives. Please also note the rights field, which has important information regarding the copyright status of the image.

Using Images

Faculty, students, staff, and the general public use historic images (both digitized and analog) from the Medical Center Archives for social media, publications, presentations, and exhibitions, among other projects. To request permission to use a photograph for your project, visit library.weill.cornell.edu/archives/image-collections to download the photograph order form and other relevant permission forms.

Internal users can email or mail the completed forms to the Medical Center Archives, while external users should mail the forms along with the relevant payment to the Medical Center Archives.
